TRUE LOVE OF GOD AND WHAT IT IMPLIES Rev. Myles P. Galvin Preaches From

Day's Gospel at St. Patrick's Church That love of God should have preference in life over all other affections, that it should make us despise and banish from life all that opposes that love, and that we should follow God's will always and in all things, were the points made in a convincing sermon delivered at the high mass in St. Patrick's church Sunday by Rev. Myles P. Galvin. Father Galvin was preaching from a text in the gospet for the P. Galvin. Father Galvin was preaching from a text in the gospel for the Sunday, the seventeenth after Pentecost, Matt. xxil: 25-46, Jesus said to him: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with thy whole heart, and with thy whole soul, and with thy whole Merely talking about leving God is Merely talking about leving God is not sufficient; men must put love into practice. Professing this love for God, man must banish from his life that which prevents perfect love of God, sin. How many of us, professing such love, want really to follow cur own will instead of that of God, to which we should be submissive in the little things as well as the more important.

we should be submissive in the little things as well as the more important things of daily life.

One of the best ways to acquire true love of God is by frequent reception of Holy Communion, which implies the preparation of the soul and heart which Saint Paul recommends for that love. The Holy Eucharist, is, in a way, the form in which God's omnipotence has reached its limit, since in this food for the soul Christ gives us Himself—and what can He give more?

many handsome pattern hats left local style rooms, to be worn by pleased shoppers on formal or everyday occasions.

Among beautiful designs noted in the rounds Saturday was a purple velvet large sailor, its adornment small purple wings flat on the wide brim. The crown was in the favored soft, draped fashion.

Stunning was a military turban in brown velvet, with tall military pompon in the modish russet red.

Smart, also was a sand and brown round design, with a soft, soldier crown, as it is called this season, piped with brown. A swagger ostrich pomen is on the brim.

Tabpe and cerise velvet were contrasted in a large hat, its adornment gold and sliver ornaments and a knot of foliage.

Distinguished was a blocked hat in black velvet, with Spanish edge. The facing was of fancy plush, and for finish there was a rich jet ornament. One of the choicest of the feather-trimmed hats shown was an imported turban, with trimming of vari-colored breast and wings, beautiful in their soft tints.

Good Ventilation Essential. The requirements of food potato storage are few but imortant. A temperature of between 34 and 50 degrees: ventilation, especially in the fall before cold weather sets in; and the exclusion of light; are the most in ortant things to observe.

The potatoes should be as free from soil as possible and dry. Where the potatoes are procured from the producer this is easy to accomplish. They may be stored in unheated basements or cellars or even attics, where the potatoes for winter use has stimulated widespread interest and has resulted in many inquiries concerning approved methods of storing potatoes and the places in which they may be kept. In answer to these inquiries the Connecticut Agricultural college has prepared the following suggestions:

A temperature of 40 to 50 degrees would be ideal, but variations between 34 and 50 are safe. Keep a thermometer near the potatoes. If the weather turns very cool, place a lighted lantern or oil stove or a tub of water, or both, near the potatoes. Storage rooms should be kept dark, especially in late winter and spring. In the early winter, before cold weather sets in, some ventilation should be provided for large quantities of potatoes. A few bushels would need very little ventilation. Potatoes will not keep in a heated cellar or basement. Where there is no cool storeroom it is sometity as possible to partition off part of the basement as far as possible from the furnace. No steam pipes should run through this room. For large quantities it will pay to construct a bin. For small quantities, barrels or boxes will do.
